The Bride's Flowers.

At this time of year the bride and her retinue may carry any flowers she chooses; roses, sweet peas, pond lilles, cape jasmine, clematis, provided that the bride white flowers and the bridesmaids any color or variety that she selects for them. The wild carrot, in ample bloom at this time of the year, makes exquisite bouquets; Queen Anne's lace, its common name, is never out of place among either the richest or the simplest surroundings. And if a bride does not wear white, but a gray dress or a pale blue, she may carry plok roses, or richest

Fancies in Wedding Gifts.

There appears to be a run on ornamental tablespoons as wedding presents this season, judging by the number many a bride and bridegroom receive. Scent bottles with plain gold tops follow, but, instead of being he large size they were, they are becoming small enough to carry easily in the hand for church. Many have the tops about the size of a quarter of a dollar, and sometimes a teweled letter, or one stone surrounded by a ring of smaller ones, covers them. A set of guarded pins, one in diamonds and the other wo in emeralds and rubles, is another fashlonable offering, and so is a miniature car-
